

Orphe Divounguy

Orphe Divounguy is a senior economist with Zillow's Economic Research team where he analyzes economic data to try and identify emerging trends in the housing market. In the past, Orphe's work focused on quantitative methods for evaluating the impact of economic policy. Orphe earned a doctorate in economics from England's University of Southampton.

Orphe is also the founder of the Quantitative Research Group and the co-host of the Everyday Economics podcast. Orphe also serves on the board of Housing Connector, a nonprofit dedicated to lowering barriers to housing.

The team's research can be found at zillow.com/research and includes analyses about for-sale and rental market dynamics, fair housing, and other topics. Zillow also provides dozens of housing market datasets freely available for download at zillow.com/data.
