Multifamily Markup

THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON: The Race to August Recess

Several committees packed in hearings ahead of the upcoming Congressional recess. Here’s a rundown of which ones we’ve been closely tracking and why:

The Senate Finance Committee held a hearing to explore tax incentives within the affordable housing space.

Why This Matters: This hearing gave us an opportunity to educate lawmakers about the shortage of multifamily units, a key driver of the nation’s housing affordability challenge—and propose solutions to fix it.

The House Committee on Energy and Commerce signed off on a data privacy measure that would create a national standard.

Why this Matters: Multifamily firms are faced with a growing patchwork of state data privacy standards that can be both onerous and costly. We’re pleased our years of advocacy in this space is paying off and a national standard is potentially within reach.

The House Financial Services Committee held an FHFA oversight hearing where Director Thompson testified on the state of the GSEs and potential GSE reform.

Why this Matters: Although the hearing largely focused on the single-family space, this was a critical advocacy opportunity to underscore the unique needs of the multifamily industry and stress the importance of preserving the mortgage liquidity currently provided by the GSEs in all markets during all economic cycles.

HIGHER INTEREST RATES BEGIN TO IMPACT MULTIFAMILY

The multifamily industry is beginning to feel the pressure as a result of the Fed’s interest rate hikes—according to the latest NMHC.
Quarterly Survey findings. As the apartment market records its sixth consecutive quarter of tightening conditions, here’s what we’re tracking:

- Those reporting tighter conditions slightly outpaced those reporting looser market conditions, with just over half of respondents reporting unchanged conditions.
- Apartment sales volume fell for most respondents, while both equity and debt financing became more costly.
- Just over half of respondents believe that current economic and geopolitical challenges have decreased investment in the multifamily market. Only 10% of respondents held the opposite view—that investment has actually increased because multifamily is seen as an attractive asset relative to other alternatives in the current market.
