HUD Pushes Pro-Development Policy Shift

HUD Secretary Ben Carson announced new moves this week to shake up some key housing policies, which include making changes to the agency’s Affirmatively Furthering Fair Housing (AFFH) rule. The announcement marks a shift away from previous efforts to address housing affordability challenges by injecting lower-income housing into more neighborhoods, instead focusing on the advancement of more pro-growth zoning and land-use policies to spur new housing development.

Industry experts say removing some development barriers will benefit housing affordability across the market. "Instead of making them a consideration, this new version of AFFH makes addressing these traditional barriers to development activity and expansion of opportunity the priority," explains Kimble Ratliff, vice president of government affairs at the NMHC.

EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS
Are You Ready for the Next Storm?
The 2017 storm season went down in the record books as the costliest year for natural disasters, exacting $306 billion in damage. And with the increasing frequency and intensity of extreme weather events, disaster preparedness is central to our industry's operations, from the property level to the C-suite. NMHC’s Kevin Donnelly shares tips and resources to help companies get started.

MARKETS
In Expensive Cities, Rents Fall for the Rich but Rise for the Poor (paywall)
While some housing-burdened cities have recently experienced some rent declines in the wake of a lot of new construction activity, some analysis suggests that relief has not always reached those renters that need it the most, with higher-end renters benefitting more from the declines. However, some industry watchers strongly disagree.

CONSTRUCTION
Construction Industry Attracts $1.3 Billion in Venture Capital
Tech investment in construction and related fields has grown rapidly in the past decade, helping to move a once relatively low-tech sector towards increased productivity. "Construction is one of the least digitalized industries, so many startups are seizing the opportunity to build technology that would increase efficiency within this market," says one analyst.

New Apartment Development Activity Keeps Pace

Data from the U.S. Census Bureau’s New Residential Construction Survey indicates that apartment development continues to be strong, with multifamily permits, starts and completions all either unchanged or up year over year.

However, more completions are beginning to come online, with a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 402,300 units. This is the highest number on record since the late 1980s—but still within the 300,000 to 400,00 units NMHC estimates are needed annually to keep up with demand.
